Lucid presentation for the layman of modern scientific knowledge and theory about the universe. Expanded from the articles that appeared in Harper's

"He discusses the theories which physicists have evolved in their attempts to explain the workings of the universe, and which by reason of their rejection or acceptance were fundamental to the development of our modern quantum and relativity theories. The discussion centers about the conflicting wave and particle theories of light, and leads finally to an explanation of the unified field theory, wherein Einstein hopes to evolve a single physical law embodying the concepts of matter, gravitation and electromagnetism." 1 Thermodynamics 45-4888

"A complete revision of the authors' 'Fundamentals of the thermodynamics,' copyright 1937. . . (revised 1942)"

"It presents the basic principles and methods of thermodynamics, without emphasizing their application in any particular field. The topics covered include: Heat and work; Availability of heat energy; Thermodynamic properties of gases; Compressed air; Internal combustion engines, and Steam cycles. Problems are given at the end of each chapter." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

1 Thermodynamics 41-14262

First edition 1920

"The new material includes the thermodynamic treatment of uniform flow processes and new vapor tables. Reversible and irreversible processes are given additional attention. All chapters were carefully checked, several were entirely rewritten. . . More space was devoted to cycles, heat transfer, refrigeration, and air conditioning. . . New problems and new tables have been added. Illustrations have been increased from fifty-four to eighty." Preface to sixth edition

"Consists of six lectures 'adapted to a juvenile auditory' given at the request of the Royal Institution. In the American edition the expressions conform to American usage, or an explanation is given in a note. The first three chapters are devoted to the behavior of electric charges, currents, and magnets, and to fundamental apparatus such as cells, motors, and dynamos. The last three deal with electric apparatus in every day use such as power stations, the telephone, telegraph, and radio. Many diagrams and photographs." Industrial arts index

"This title is one of several works that will eventually replace the authors' 'Introduction to Theoretical Physics' (1933). The change in format has been made so that better-rounded and more useful treatments could be made of such branches of physics as electromagnetism and the quantum theory. The separate titles are still intended for use in rigorous courses in college physics. In the present book, the general arrangement and form of presentation are similar to the chapters on electromagnetism of the 1933 work, but several topics such as the solution of La Pace's equations, dielectrics, electron theory and dispersion, are treated in greater detail. New material on magnetic materials and cavity resonators has also been added. Some knowledge of mechanics and advanced mathematics is necessary for comprehension of the authors' exposition." Chemical and metallurgical engineering

'The scope of the book is broader than the title would seem to indicate. It gives English meanings, not only of German words occurring in the literature of general and industrial chemistry, but includes words used in scientific and technical German literature generally, as well as a good German vocabulary. Very useful to anyone who has occasion to read German scientific or technical books or periodicals." Donald Hendry

"This single volume aims to give an account of the most important electrochemical industries, as well as the principal applications of electrochemistry in the laboratory. Both the theoretical and technical points of view are discussed and numerous references to the literature of each are cited. While the book purports to be a textbook, its contents, presuppose a greater knowledge in the fields of chemistry, physics and physical chemistry than the ordinary student would possess." "According to the preface, the system presented in this sophomore text is the result of an experimental investigation of ten years' duration, to provide not only reliable and sensitive qualitative information in regard to the constituents present in the material being analyzed but also sufficient quantitative information to eliminate in many cases the need for further quantitative determinations. After giving the method for the separation of the various constituents, methods (largely volumetric) for estimating the amount of each are provided. Considerable experimental data are presented to show the effectiveness and limitations of the methods. A suggested course for one year is outlined in the appendix. Questions, problems, tables." This book is directed specifically to that large body of ambitious students who wish to study beginning organic chemistry and gain more than a superficial knowledge of the subject. To accomplish this end the material is so arranged that the emphasis falls on the fundamentals of the science, namely, nomenclature, synthesis, reactions, and properties. The descriptive material is limited to a minimum; such necessary information is usually presented in tables. The method of presentation is designed to help the beginning student of organic chemistry to understand the subject

"This book is an abridged form of the author's 'Introduction to Physical Geology' and 'Introduction to Historical Geology.' It is intended to serve as a text for a one-semester course in general geology. It has been so written that a formal knowledge of neither chemistry, physics, nor biology is a prerequisite for a reasonable understanding of its contents." Preface to first edition

It has been the author's "purpose to sketch in broad outline the main features that have characterized the developmental changes in the Earth and its life. The picture has necessarily been selective, and the topics included present in a continuous story what otherwise the lay reader would have to glean from many sources, as unrelated fragments. " 'The majestic conflict of terrestrial forces is described both as a drama in its own right, and as a theater where man is protagonist of the play,' by a student of earth history, in terms that are understandable, and in a manner that is fascinating to the layman. Among the factors in the evolution of the surface of the earth and its inhabitants, are discussed the atmosphere, water (both surface and hidden) ice, the sea, volcanic activity and the earthquake. The importance of stones and minerals in man's progress is also emphasized." N.Y. libraries

1 Climatology 2 Meteorology 3 Weather (W) A 43-3353

"Supplemented by remarkable weather photographs and charts, the book deals first with the size, length, and height of waves, and the force and direction of wind. Clouds, ocean currents, temperatures and climate, rain, snow and fog . . . are among the many subjects [also] considered. The remaining chapters discuss the weather of the various continents, with details concerning particular localities." Scientific book club review

(W) 46-1284

This book was "written to fill a definite need, namely to tell the story of amphibian and reptilian evolution . . . also to supplement the displays of fossil amphibians and reptiles in the American Museum of Natural History, but it is written in such a way that it may be used by anyone interested in the subject." "The author has endeavored to prepare a course of lectures of value both to paleontologist and the general reader. His work is a study of the birth places of the several kinds of mammals, of their competitions, migrations, and extinctions and of the times and places of the occurrence of these great events in the world's history. Geology, geography, botany and climate are treated as leading to a clear understanding of each of the successive groups and movements of mammalian life." Book rev. digest

"The peculiar feature of Prof. Osborn's book, indeed, is its stimulating freshness, and he is to be congratulated on the impulse which it is certain to give to the studies with which it deals." Nature

"Young man, you are normal"; findings from a study of students. Putnam 1945 210p illus $2.50 573

1 Man—Constitution 45-4528

The author "reports on the discoveries made during a six-year investigation of some 268 'normal' young men. He tells, as an innocent anthropological bystander, what the Grant Study of the Harvard Department of Hygiene has revealed that is of significance to the lay reader and how the different aspects of the human individual's structure and function seem to fit together in the promising young man." First edition 1916

A careful study of the effect of climate on man's energy and development, based on questionnaires filled out by expert observers in many countries. Only 5 of the 50 observers were Asiatics, so that the judgment given represents in the main the opinion of the white race, based on their conception of what constitutes a high type of civilization

Analyzed in Essay and general literature index

A "study of civilization as the unfinished product of evolutionary forces, swayed by biological inheritance, physical environment, cultural endowment." Kirkus

" 'This book is an attempt to analyze the role of biological inheritance and physical environment in influencing the course of history.' It embodies the matured concepts arising from the content of Professor Huntington's well-known, previously published books and articles, but includes also a considerable amount of new material notably that in the several chapters on cycles." 1 Anthropogeography (W) 40-34580

The first edition (published 1920) of this book differed from other advanced textbooks of geography in "its concentration on human relationships; its emphasis on the effects of climate . . . its insistence on the importance of vegetation and diet; and its interpretation of political geography. In the present (fifth) edition these original qualities remain unchanged. . . Approximately half of the material is new, and many minor changes have been made in the remainder." 1 Botany 2 Plants—Collection and preservation (W) 47-11866

"After giving a . . . picture of the plant world—its classification and identification—Dr Zim makes a survey of practical hobbies in the plant kingdom, and shows how, with simple equipment, there are many things an amateur can do, whether he lives in the country or in the city. An important feature of the book is a geographical list of places in the United States which are of particular interest to the plant enthusiast." Huntting

1 Bacteriology 2 Micro-organisms 29-8142

"The following sketches grew out of a series of radio talks on communicable diseases and their microbes. . . We have endeavored to describe simply and accurately the most important facts known that help us determine how and why some microbes are harmful to man, others harmless and still others helpful. We also tell how man can use available knowledge to protect himself against harmful ones and utilize more fully the activities of the useful." Preface

"A straightforward story, easy to read but not merely jazzed up. This is one of those books that takes the layman beyond his customary superficial acceptance of theories and practices, and for the reading of alert young people of twelve to twenty it is not too technical." World tomorrow

* Parade of the animal kingdom. Macmillan 1935 675p illus $4.95 590

1 Zoology (W) 35-27342

" 'Thousands of scientists have devoted their lives to the study of the Animal Kingdom with the result that we now have a rather comprehensive knowledge of the galaxy of species.' Here in this voluminous book this knowledge is presented. Beginning with the protozoa, the first division in the parade. Dr. Hegner . . . calls attention to the representative groups of animals. These range from sponges, worms, and crustaceans, through insects, fish, amphibia and birds to the mammals, flying, gnawing, hoofed, flesh-eating and aquatic. The primates are considered last." ‡ American natural history; a foundation of useful knowledge of the higher animals of North America. 16th ed. rev. . . Scribner 1935 xxv, 449p illus $7.50 590

1 Natural history—North America (W) 35-7621

Popular treatment of the living vertebrates of North America intended to bridge the gulf between scientific treatises and nature study literature

"It is a bulky volume, richly illustrated with photographs and packed full of facts. Mr. Hornaday's life has been spent among wild animals, as hunter, trapper, keeper, collector; and this, in spite of the very scientific cast of the book, often gives it a personal, first-hand flavor hardly to be expected in a general natural history, even when limited to American fauna." "Discusses many of the groups of animals the author has been observing for 25 years, the babies, pygmies and giants, the capturing of animals for the zoo, feeding the captives, and medical and surgical treatment. Photographic illustrations." N.Y. libraries

"One reads the book with a sense of dependability, because it is evident from the start that Dr. Blair writes about animals only what he has seen and himself knows to be true. He does not imagine or embroider or indulge in sentiment or conjecture. Instead he sets down in crisp, brief sentences the simple truth as he has observed it. And whoever likes animals will find in the book a wonderful lot of varied and interesting knowledge." N.Y. Times

A "book for the general reader of every age exploring fact and fable about a wide variety of animals. It is written largely in question-and-answer form and includes the familiar and the very unfamiliar." Huntting

"In five parts—Mammals, birds, fish, amphibians, and reptiles—the author sets us straight on such matters as how to tell a poisonous snake from a nonpoisonous one, why frogs die in dry air, what bird picks the teeth of crocodiles. Attractive illustrations are an added feature. School and public libraries should find it useful." Current reference bks.

"Published under the auspices of the New York zoological society"

"To be introduced by William Beebe to the life in the waters about Nonsuch, Bermuda, is a tremendously exciting and absorbing experience. Accounts of skilled technic in helmet diving, of the grand sport of catching flyingfish with a net when poised in the bow of a racing outboard motorboat are varied by descriptions of a peacock flounder, or the amazing internal anatomy of a shark, 55 illustrations, one in color." "A considerable number of important and useful inventions are made by research specialists who are employed by the National Government. These inventions are often patented and the patents assigned to the Government for the use of the public. The purpose of this book is to bring to the attention of interested persons, the public service patents of the Department of Agriculture. The patents have been selected on the basis of probable commercial interest. The title, patent number, patent date, inventor's name and an abstract are given for each patent listed. Also, the dedicated patents, which may be used without formal permission, are distinguished from the assigned patents, for the use of which a permissive but royalty-free license must be obtained." "Material is presented on the education of nurses in the United States, on national organizations, on questions of supply of and demand for nurses, on distribution of nurses, and on salaries in the field. Some attention is given also to phases of public health nursing. One of the best parts of the book is the summary, which consists of a statement of the present status of nursing, of recommendations made as the result of two current studies of nursing, and of a brief statement of the means needed if nursing is to control its present standards in the interests of better nursing for the community." First published 1926
"One theme runs through this fourth edition of 'Hygiene'—What health situations exist in the life of individuals and peoples, what health objectives arise from them, and what action is scientifically appropriate on the part of the layman, especially the college student. . . To incorporate all the new developments of science, 'Hygiene' has been entirely reset. Some chapters have been shortened; others have been lengthened; and a few new chapters have been written." In this Catalog books on the nervous system including physiology, hygiene and diseases are classed here in order to keep them together

Bisch, Louis Edward, 1885-
* Your nerves; how to release emotional tensions. Funk, W. 1945 310p $2.50 613.8

1 Neuroses 2 Personality, Disorders of 3 Psychology, Applied S G 45-173

The author "handles the array of 'symptoms' of emotional tensions to which most people, at some time or other, find themselves addicted, and he makes one feel fully competent to take care of one's own nerves. Sex emotions, sleeplessness, boredom, irritability, excessive smoking and drinking, fears, phobias, etc.—each factor is . . . analyzed, without undue emphasis on neuroticism, and in such a way that its better understanding leads naturally to constructive control and cure." Kirkus

Burton, Mary Louise Hart, and Jennings, Sage Holter
* Your child or mine; the story of the cerebral-palsied child. Coward-McCann 1949 64p illus $1.25 613.8

1 Disabled—Rehabilitation, etc. 2 Paralysis, Cerebral 49-7525

"The authors describe the treatment, the tremendous strides made in educating these children to walk, to talk, to become useful members of society. They indicate what can be done before it is too late, medically, and before emotional situations of parental rejection or social stigma have been created." Cincinnati

Bibliography: p62-64

Fabricant, Noah Daniel, 1904-
* Headaches; what causes them, how to get relief. Farrar, Straus 1949 149p $2.50 613.8

1 Headaches (W) 49-9358

At head of title: A medical book for the layman

"Headaches, which are usually a symptom or a functional disturbance, have a wide range of variation in their frequency, their severity, their source. Here they are examined in relation to the eye and eye-strain, glaucoma; to facial neuralgia; allergies; sinus; tumors and other brain disturbances; high blood pressure and constipation; and such specifics as migraines, hangovers, sunstroke, etc. [are discussed]" Kirkus

"The text is neither too scientific, nor yet too over-simplified. The author has succeeded in maintaining a happy balance. This book makes good reading; it is interlarded with just sufficient humor to avoid the dullness of a dry, scientific treatise. It should prove of interest to both the doctor and the patient." Safeguarding mental health. Bruce pub. 1937 297p (Science and culture ser) $2.50 613.8

1 Mental physiology and hygiene 37-5190

"Father McCarthy outlines briefly the conditions that lead to the more serious mental diseases like dementia praecox, paranoia and the manic-depressive psychoses. But his insistence is not on these. It is on the formation in the child of mental states which lead to failure in business and social relations and cause discouragement, discontent, anguish, fears in the adult." America

Rhoades, Winfred, 1872-
The self you have to live with. Rev. ed. Lippincott 1947 254p $2 613.8

1 Mental physiology and hygiene Med 47-502

First edition 1938. In the 1947 edition two chapters were added

Contents: Creating a self to live with; Learning how to live; Turning unadjustment into adjustment; Coöperating with time; Art of not worrying; Relaxation and power; Education of desire; It's the soul that needs treatment; Dealing honorably with oneself; Fact of responsibility; Task of life

"A quiet and sensible approach to some of the problems of personal adjustment and mental ill health from which so many modern women suffer. Religious in tone and will appeal to those who find some of the more popular treatments distasteful." Wis. bul.

Calm your nerves; the prevention and cure of nervous breakdown. . . Rinehart 240p $3 613.8

1 Nervous system—Hygiene 2 Neurasthenia [49-204]

A reprint of a book published 1933 by Farrar with title: Nervous breakdown

"Dr Wolfe describes a nervous breakdown as a 'personality knock-out' or an unconscious device designed to 'save face' before the disaster occurs. He explains the causes, symptoms and types of nervous breakdown and analyzes in detail a complete case history illustrative of each type. The closing chapters provide practical suggestions for re-gaining mental health." Book rev. digest

"The book is exceedingly well written, contains a fund of excellent advice, is well balanced in its scientific outlook and is distinctly practical. It shows ample evidence of orderly thinking and presents suggestions in a common sense and usable fashion. It can be unreservedly recommended to the layman." American medical association. Journal

1 Public health 42-36016

"The first edition of this volume was published in 1929. . . As we surveyed the project of incorporating the new findings, substituting the new figures and omitting the material which had become antiquated it became evident that certain of the chapters, such as those on military hygiene and the health agencies, would have to be practically rewritten while most of the other chapters would not require such complete revamping. We have therefore maintained the general plan of the first edition with but slight changes in the five section headings and twenty-five chapter titles." Preface

This book "deals more with sick unhappy persons than with their diseases, more with symptoms and their meaning than with disease entities, more with the handling of patients than with the giving of medicines, and more with the puzzling, poorly understood and poorly described abdominal discomforts and indigestions than with the well-known organic diseases such as ulcer, cholecystitis and cancer." 1 Rectum—Diseases [28-30560]
A reprint, with a few minor corrections of the first edition of 1927
"The common disorders of the intestines and rectum are helpfully and intelligibly discussed here by an expert physician. Most of the leading health journals praise the book, making, however, the criticism that the author stresses too greatly the necessity of consulting a specialist rather than the family doctor." "A story of civil engineering and construction, of men, ideas and materials. It is an outline of what has been done in this field and a description of the methods and means by which the ends were attained. Some of the subjects described are, how tunnels under water are built, what a cantilever is, why concrete is reinforced, how railroads are built over swamps, and many other facts which make engineering an adventure. Well illustrated." Ontario library review

Part II, 'Elements of Material Economics,' is the result of author's experience in civil and military agencies of the government. Much of the grouping of fundamental data has not appeared in any other book." Library journal

"To call a smallish handbook 'An Encyclopedia for Purchasing Agents, Engineers, Executives and Foremen' seems offhand a rather strained ambition, but a captious user will find disappointingly little to grumble at when he comes to resort to it. A skillful economy of words affords place not only for the information essential to its chosen audience but also for many desirable secondary data. This audience is then likely to be thankful that its informant is at least not encyclopedic in bulk." Chemical and metallurgical engineering

"This text . . . has been written to meet fully the needs of the field of industrial training by providing an adequately simplified discussion of the principles involved. It is also well adapted for those who desire to study at home through correspondence instruction. . . Mathematics above the level of trigonometry have been entirely avoided in presenting the theory and practice involved. The subject includes the usual topics of tension and compression; riveted joints are explained in an up-to-date manner, and welded connections are included. Beam design is thoroughly discussed and beam deflections are considered. The design of steel and timber columns is covered by the latest methods and equations of design." Preface

1 Engineering—Dictionaries 43-12450

First published 1940

"A condensed encyclopedia and mechanical dictionary for engineers, mechanics, technical schools, industrial plants, and public libraries, giving the most essential facts about 4500 important engineering subjects." Subtitle

"In general, this 'Encyclopedia' consists of concise treatises ranging from short paragraphs to several pages in length. . . All entries are arranged alphabetically under the heading or word likely to be referred to. . . This work of reference is unusual in its scope, and very clear in statement." N.Y. 620.7 Technical writing

This number has been used for books on technical writing in order to separate this specific material from general books on the writing of English and bring them together in a convenient place

Agg, Thomas Radford, 1878-1947, and Foster, Walter Linder, 1883-1934

Preparation of engineering reports. McGraw 1935 192p $2.50 620.7

1 Engineering 2 Reports—Preparation 35-33144

"What an engineering report should contain, and how the material, including illustrations, diagrams, and references should be arranged. Appendix D is a bibliography of 101 engineering reports which can be consulted as examples." Pratt Technical books

Crouch, William George, 1903- and Zetler, Robert L.

Guide to technical writing. Ronald 1948 401p illus $4 620.7

1 Rhetoric 2 Technology—Language 48-7756

"A collection of examples of business and technical letters, articles, and reports, designed as a practical aid for undergraduates and for practicing technical men. Critical analysis of the selections, an index to English usage, a general reading list of biographies, novels, and plays for the engineer, and a valuable chapter on speaking techniques contribute to the usefulness of this handbook." Current reference bks.

1 Authorship 2 Technology—Language A 48-840

First published 1925 by S. F. Trelease and E. S. Yule with title: "Preparation of scientific and technical papers." The 1947 edition has been revised and largely rewritten

"A handbook for students and research workers in all branches of science." Subtitle

"Is not concerned with sources of information, but with matters of form, style, and arrangement. For this purpose it is a valuable manual which may be profitably consulted by writers of theses and reports, and papers for the technical and trade press. The principles set forth are applicable to a broader field than purely scientific writing, and some instruction in the material it contains should be included in every college course." Pittsburgh

First published 1922. In this thoro revision the "division on Modern Types of Boilers has been entirely rewritten and divided into two parts—one division on Fire-tube Boilers and one on Water-tube Boilers. In these divisions material has been added on steam driers, steam washers, waterwalls, and superheaters. The divisions on boiler materials, stresses, and joints have been made to agree with the 1933 A.S.M.E. Boiler Construction Code . . .and material added on welding. New text and illustrations have been prepared on stokers, pulverized coal, oil burning, boiler settings, furnaces, economizers, air preheaters, fans for induced and forced draft, and feed-water treatment." Preface to the second edition

First published 1939 in one volume. In the second edition "the request for the additional material influenced the decision to divide the text into two volumes, one on circuits and the other on machines. . . [Many of the] chapters have been expanded and clarified to add to the usefulness of the text; many of these changes were made upon the request and advice of users of the text." Preface to the second edition

"Intended for non-electrical engineering students who take electrical engineering as a secondary subject. By combining the concepts of alternating current and direct current they find it easier to develop the subject with less repetition and confusion. Stress is placed on physical analysis rather than on mathematical derivations, and the subject is, on the whole, treated qualitatively. The calculus has been sparingly used and demonstration problems and figures have been kept simple. Many problems for solution are given at the chapter endings." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

1 Electric currents, Alternating 39-8556

First edition 1919

"Many practical men have forgotten much of the mathematics they studied at school, so the authors devote themselves to simplifying the mathematical wording as much as possible and giving graphical methods which, with the help of simple numerical tables, enable them to solve most of the practical problems they come across with the minimum of labour. The chapters on motors, starters and controllers, and on converters and rectifiers will be found useful to many." Nature

1 Electric coils 2 Electric motors (W) 38-33344

"It is the purpose of this book to present as simply as possible practical information that will enable engineers and repairmen to modernize older types of alternating-current motors and generators by redesigning and rebuilding their windings as well as replace burned-out or defective windings in present-day designs. With some of the older types of machines the reduction of losses that can be obtained through the use of a modern winding will pay for the job in less than a year. . . The last chapter presents the latest information available on the properties and applications of the glass-fabric insulating materials that have recently been developed." Preface

"This book of British origin is addressed primarily to engineers, physicists, and other scientists who are familiar with electromagnetic theory and with standard radio practice. On this level, it provides a concise, general survey of basic principles and of special problems that affect the design of radar apparatus and its usefulness. It is not complete enough to serve the needs of engineers working in the field, but it is an admirable statement for the scientifically-trained non-specialist. The history of radar is covered very briefly in the introduction." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

1 Radio 44-4236

First published 1929 by R. L. Duncan. In the 1944 "edition a considerable amount of information has been included in the form of discussions and explanations. . . [It also] contains considerable material dealing with modulation, oscillators, classes of amplifiers, and rectifier power supplies. Also, a good portion of new material is given over to the operation of circuits to provide maximum frequency stability of a transmitter. Included are many problems dealing with percentage modulation and questions on typical troubles and causes of distortion of an audio signal." Foreword

"A basic textbook for practical students such as radio amateurs and radio repairmen. The treatment assumes that the reader will have a knowedge of standard radio principles and apparatus. Mathematics is used sparingly; nevertheless the uses of a few advanced mathematical techniques, for example Bessel functions, are explained. The various methods of modulating radio signals are outlined, then the specific principles that underlie frequency modulation apparatus and techniques are described fully. Many circuit diagrams are included and enough construction detail is provided to enable the amateur radio operator to construct F-M apparatus. "The authors have emphasized operation rather than design, and discussed the applications to which different types of pumps are suited. What may be expected of the various types and their service limitations is considered an essential topic, so that mistaken choice will not lead to trouble in operation. The text includes numerous photographs, diagrams, charts, figures and tables." Industrial arts index

"This text, written for hydraulic engineers and advanced students, provides a detailed discussion of the basic principles of the subject. Theoretical aspects are closely interwoven with practical descriptions of the steps to be followed in designing pump parts and discussions of the behavior of centrifugal pumps under varying conditions. Many of the problems discussed had their origin in the new uses to which such pumps have been put in recent years, and constant reference is made to experimental studies carried out in connection with cavitation, axial and radial thrust, control of head-capacity, brake-horsepower curves, etc." N.Y. public lib. 1 Machine tools 41-19998

"In one sense this text is a companion text to our popular book 'Tool Making' by the same author. It covers the same general field of operations, but in this new book the design of fixtures and tools is stressed, rather than the method of making them. This book has the general characteristics of all our 'how-to-do-it' books: it is written in such a simple and direct style that the beginning tool designer will find valuable information and help on simple jobs, and the expert will find many suggestions to help in the ever increasing number of problems his job presents." Preface

1 Machine tools 2 Tools 39-9494

"Toolroom tools and equipment, machine tools, heat-treating processes, production methods, production tools." Subtitle

"The text is written so that the beginning toolmaker is led from the simple facts about his personal tools and the equipment which the shop provides, to the processes of the toolmaker's craft. This is done through the presentation of many typical jobs. The jobs are presented as finished working drawings and the tools which they represent may be made from these drawings. The information which the drawings supply, and the study of the drawings themselves, will make an important contribution to the training of any toolmaker. The section on Production Tools is especially valuable for the toolmaker with some experience." Preface

"In this book, the writer has endeavored to explain the various principles of Fairing, Development and Layout, by first expounding the fundamental principles of these operations and then explaining how they are used to achieve a definite result. The fundamentals underlying the work of fairing and development are used identically for these operations on both ships and aircraft. The aircraft loft was, in the beginning, an adaptation of the shipbuilding system. With these two facts in mind, the writer has put together his experiences in both industries to make this book the first to cover the combined fields." Introduction

"Professor Bishop in preparing for his book had the structural engineering student and his need for fundamental knowledge in mind. His approach, based on many years of teaching the subject, is to apply the fundamental principles of design first to detached individual members without regard to their relation to other members in the structure. This permits classroom design of many similar problems before the student is called upon to apply the fundamentals to the design of more complete structures where the interdependence of the different members must be taken into account. The author "intends this volume as an introductory exposition for the instruction of the general engineering classes. It presupposes an elementary knowledge of statics and strength of materials. Part I is virtually unchanged from the first edition (1940), while Part II shows considerable revision and many new pages of problems have been added throughout the text. The chapter on light-gage steel construction is new, and newly added tables of standards, properties, sizes, and other material specifications appear in the appendix." N.Y. public lib. "The prime object of this book is to furnish complete information for logical design of bridges other than trusses and arches. It presents the first comprehensive treatment of all types of bridges that have thus far been developed, such as slab bridges, simple deck and through girder bridges, cantilever and continuous girder bridges, rigid frames, and flat-slab bridges. The treatment includes discussion of the relative economy and usefulness of these types for different conditions and also the procedure to be followed in developing a design best fitted for any specific requirement. Examples of computations and illustrations of design details are also given, making the book of practical value not only to the engineer and builder but also to the student who intends to enter the field of structural engineering." A record "of a year on a Kennebec farm is captured here . . . beginning with the dead of winter and following in the season's changes through the late fall. . . . Excerpts from a farm diary, in contrasting type offer a pleasing break to eye and mental ear." Kirkus

"Henry Beston writes with facility and charm, and he conveys the human warmth of a rural community unusually well. He has his feet on the ground, sees life from the enduring foundations of a stony field. If at times there seems to be more charm than substance to his writing, it is because, in his own words, 'Who would live happily in the country must be wisely prepared to take great pleasure in little things.'" The 1935 edition is a reissue of the 6 volume edition of 1914-17

"Founded upon his 'Cyclopedia of American horticulture,' 4 volumes, 1902-04, but so revised and enlarged as to be practically a new work. Aims to cover completely the horticultural floras of the continental United States and Canada and to include the more outstanding species grown in a horticultural way in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the other Islands. The last volume includes also supplementary articles, a finding list of binomials, and a general index. Includes biographies. Signed articles by specialists, bibliographies. Special features to be noted are: (1) the very comprehensive inclusion of American native plants, trees and shrubs, which makes the work useful for questions in botany; (2) the full indexing of illustrations, both black and white and colored, included in many other works, e.g. periodicals, collections, etc." Mudge

"A discussion, for the amateur, and the professional and commercial grower, of the kinds, characteristics and methods of cultivation of the species of plants grown in the regions of the United States and Canada for ornament, for fancy, for fruit and for vegetables; with keys to the natural families and genera, descriptions of the horticultural capabilities of the states and provinces and dependent islands, and sketches of eminent horticulturists." "The first Hortus was published in December 1930. . . A reprint was published in 1935, with addition of a large Supplement. . . The present volume is Hortus Second, to include the plants in cultivation to the close of 1939 and the beginning of 1940. . . Not a reprint, but a new work set in different type and format, to bring the continuing enterprise down to date. . . It includes most of the former book and also much more." Hortus second

This dictionary supplements the "Standard cyclopedia of horticulture" and is not an abridgment of that work. It is an annotated inventory of plants now in cultivation in the United States and Canada outside of botanic gardens and experiment stations. It gives brief information under each genus and species

"An essayist with something new to say is Paul B. Sears of the University of Oklahoma, whose book tells how men destroy crops and soil to their own detriment. Nature, Mr Sears says, has a certain botanical or biological balance, which the ill-controled and often inexpert processes of men, whether pioneer settlers or residents of indefinite tenure, sometimes rudely disrupt. . . Productive soil becomes a desert, and thus the history of continents may be a chronicle of deserts on the march." Springfield Republican

2 Farms Agr 43-276

"Written out of the experience of two farmers, this sensible and timely book contributes to 'an understanding of the family-size farm as an integral and important unit in American agriculture.' It tells of the difficulties of home food production, of the need for soil conservation and wild life preservation, of the conflict between big and little farmers and why they fight over the Farm Security Administration, the relation of small farmers to the United States Department of Agriculture, the meaning of rural education, the 'new kind of individualism' and the consumer cooperative. The last chapter suggests both a program of action and a point of view to meet the challenge of the postwar period." Bookmark

1 Plants, Ornamental Agr 48-222

First published 1943. In the 1948 edition the author has "brought the methods of control of certain diseases and pests up to date whenever it was clear that the new discoveries made such changes desirable." Preface to revised edition
"The authors have tried to select those [diseases, pests, etc] which have been most injurious in the eastern United States; most of these are also the most troublesome in other parts of the country and of the world. . . [Their] selection of cultivated plants is based upon the 3000 species and varieties grown at the New York Botanical Garden; some are familiar to every gardener, others have perhaps little importance. Some of the more exotic or less familiar species grown elsewhere will be sought in vain in these pages; but all the more important ornamentals of the United States will be found there." Preface

First edition 1921. In the fourth edition "special attention has been paid to bringing the control methods up to date wherever any changes have become general; to adding new insects of importance as well as new facts about the insects discussed in the previous editions; and to changing the sequence of the orders to express their relationship better." Preface
"Of the introductory chapters, those on pest control provide a good elementary statement of the position. In the rest of the book, the method of dealing with the chief pests, order by order, is followed as in the previous editions. The book is a useful elementary treatise for North American students, in that it provides the essential facts and thereby paves the way for more detailed study." Nature

"The development of new insecticides and the increased interest in their use, which have occurred during the past few years, provide ample reason for the revision of this text on insecticides, first published in 1942. This volume has retained the general purpose of the earlier edition, namely, to provide an outline of the origin, chemistry, methods of preparation, uses and analysis of insecticides and fungicides. Its scope has been broadened to include a brief chapter on herbicides, and the emphasis is now placed on the chemical rather than biological aspects of the subject. New chapters on DDT and organic fungicides have been added, and other sections have been expanded to cover such compounds as methallyl chloride, the nitroparaffins, ammonium polysulfide and phenoxathiin. The extensive bibliographies given at the end of each chapter have been brought up to date." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

1 Gardening—History 34-15242
"Tells the whole history of gardening from the earliest efforts of primitive man with food plants to the terraced gardens of skyscraper apartments. The book deals with all kinds of gardens as they flourished in various eras and countries—Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian and Persian gardens, gardening in ancient Greece and Rome, monastic and medieval gardens, Spanish and Arabian gardens, the garden flowering of the Renaissance, English and French gardening, and the rise of gardening in America." Book rev. digest
"Most gardeners have no time and perhaps none have the special fitness of the author, to untangle its long story. Naturally a book that does so, and does it so well, makes delightful reading. It is also beautifully illustrated, competently indexed, and provided with a most useful bibliography." Sat. rev. of lit.

Elements of livestock judging; ed. by R. W. Gregory. [Rev. ed.] Lippincott 1941 294p illus $3 636

1 Livestock judging 41-12847

First published 1927. "In this new and more complete edition, the chapter on methods of teaching livestock judging has been eliminated, as such. . . There has been added a brief description of the breed-type features of each of the common breeds. . . There is a general and growing interest in recreational and pleasure riding. The addition of a chapter on the saddle horse was therefore believed to be desirable. [Glossary]" Preface

"Principles and methods of judging horses, mules, swine, dairy and beef cattle, and sheep are given briefly, and illustrated with many photographs. Score cards are shown and two chapters for teachers give methods of teaching and the training of live stock judging teams." Bkl.

First published 1929. In the 1949 edition "more information and examples have . . . been inserted regarding capitalization, punctuation, grammar, the writing of reports, and the framing of resolutions." Preface

"The material is divided into two parts: the first containing rules with illustrations of correct form in English; the second consisting of various types of letters relating to business, social, and official usage, as well as other forms of business writing often required of the secretary. These include, among other types, the making of resolutions, the writing of minutes, the framing of petitions, and the compiling of reports." Preface to first edition

"There is hardly a secretary in all this land who would not be glad to have it always at her elbow. And there is many another who would be almost equally thankful for its advice and counsel." N.Y. Times

First published 1924. "There has been more progress in the development of accounting theory as well as a greater tendency to challenge accepted procedures, than during any preceding period of similar length. In this [1946] revision, an attempt has been made to give full recognition to the consequences of these trends. Moreover, during the same period, increasing emphasis has been placed on the importance of accounting theory as a basis of governing principles, conventions, and rules. In recognition of this increasing emphasis, two new chapters dealing wholly with fundamental accounting theory have been added, and more consideration has been given to matters of theory throughout the book." Advanced accounting. Macmillan 1941 xx, 837p illus $5 657
1 Accounting 41-10174
"In preparing this book the author's main purpose has been to furnish adequate material for intermediate and advanced courses in the principles of accounting offered to college and university students. At the same time the needs of practicing accountants for a thorough and up-to-date discussion of the crucial problems of valuation, analysis, and reporting have been kept in mind. The emphasis is on corporation accounts and statements, although much of the material is applicable to other forms of business organization." Preface

Essentials of accounting. Rev. ed. Macmillan 1949 xx, 863p illus $5.50 657
1 Accounting 49-3970
"Designed primarily to furnish material for a thoroughgoing course in accounting principles at the college or university level. The treatment of the subject, the author believes, will be found sufficiently intensive to provide a satisfactory foundation for advanced and specialized courses. . . It is also hoped that the book will prove useful to readers other than college students who wish to have a complete statement of fundamentals available for study or reference. . . In the eleven years since the first edition appeared [in 1938] principles and procedures have been subjected to active discussion and criticism by professional accountants, teachers, and other groups. . . Of special importance is the increasing awareness of the limitations of conventional accounting in the face of severe and sustained change in the general price level (or in the value of the dollar, as one pleases). In preparing the revision it has of course been necessary to take these factors into consideration. Some of the recent suggestions for improvement in terminology have been adopted." Preface

1 Chemical engineering 2 Chemistry, Physical and theoretical 3 Chemistry, Technical 47-12325

"Unlike the usual introductory textbook in chemical engineering, which deals chiefly with the flow of fluids, heat transfer, distillation and the other so-called unit operations, this book is designed to give the student a broad view of the work of chemical engineers in industry. Thus the first chapter deals with human relations, such matters as getting along with the boss, and how to express one's thoughts clearly; and the final chapter is an expert discussion of the making of technical reports. Technical fundamentals, also, are presented somewhat unconventionally. . . The work will be used mainly in college courses, but it should be helpful also to persons who desire a reliable vocational insight into the profession of chemical engineering." N.Y. public lib. "The author has prepared a concise and very readable volume describing the more important chemical industries. It should not only prove of value as a general textbook for colleges and engineering schools, but serve as an outline to the engineer and technical man who wants to familiarize himself with modern developments in industries that are outside of his own specialty. It should also serve the layman who has had very little chemical background, but who wishes to know more about these fascinating subjects, for it is written, in greater part, in plain, nontechnical language with frequently an explanation of those technical terms that are used." First published 1932. In the 1943 edition "a considerable number of fats and oils have been described in addition to those appearing in the first edition. To the chapter on methods have been added several other procedures, including that for the determination of the diene value. [Bibliographies]." Preface to second edition

"Their chemistry, production, and utilization for edible, medicinal and technical purposes." Subtitle

"The volume should be useful to all scientific and technical men interested in fats and oils, and particularly to chemists who have to work with or examine them. It has outstanding merit in its compactness, its thoroughness, its convenient arrangement, the botanical identification of each oil, and the carefully selected and conveniently arranger citations. These features should make it a particularly valuable book of reference for frequent consultation." Industrial and engineering chemistry

"A general survey of plastic materials and processes. The author has aimed his treatment at persons with some scientific or technical education but who are not specialists in the field. Thus the book is especially useful for such persons as design engineers who may be concerned with the use of plastics in manufacturing. The chemistry, raw materials, classifications, properties, testing and fabrication of plastic materials are competently discussed, and references are given to pertinent literature, including patents." "This book attempts to explain to the average man what plastics are, how they are made and molded into useful and decorative articles, and how they will affect his way of living. A good deal of the story is necessarily left out, but the material that has been included is interesting and easy to read. In addition to the main story, there is a brief discussion of employment opportunities in the industry and what technical training is necessary to qualify for them. A short list of manufacturers and trade names completes the volume." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

First published 1943. "One of the most useful works among the literature on plastics. The purpose and scope of the volume have not been materially changed in this edition. It still provides a comprehensive survey of the chemistry, properties, uses, and manufacture of plastics materials and products. It is approximately 500 pages longer, a reflection of the tremendous development of the industry in the five years since the first edition was published. All of the chapters have been revised, some of them very substantially; and there are new chapters on adhesives, cost accounting, the plastics industry throughout the world, and patents. The last provides a classified listing of United States patents granted 1938-1945. The bibliography, glossaries, lists of trade-marks and names, and the extensive tabulations of technical data have all been revised." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

The subject is treated chiefly from the practical standpoint and at a level that will appeal to plant executives and design engineers as well as to students. The illustrations are excellent and more than 430 have been included. There is a good index, but unfortunately no bibliography." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

First published 1934. "With the exception of adding a section on the electric welding of copper, a few new examples, formulas and minor additions, little change has been made in this [1943] edition in treating sheet copper and tube working. It was felt, however, that in view of the increasing use of nickel, Monel metal, Inconel and the stainless steels the manual would be of more value if this subject was treated more fully in the light of recent experience in working these metals, which has been done in this edition." 1 Carpentry 2 Handicraft (W) 38-37228

"A collection of useful things that I have had a lot of fun designing and making. Most of the projects were described in my weekly column in the New York Sun." Preface

"Here are diagramed directions for making outdoor things, furniture, games, toys, novelties, household equipment, and the furnishings of special rooms. Although most of these operations require only ordinary tools, there are suggestions for equipping the shop with power-driven machinery. As the work is not a textbook of carpentry or of cabinet-making, the amateur must learn dowelling, mortising, and other fundamental procedures elsewhere. Instructions for making a serviceable workbench, also a chapter on the care of tools, are included." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

"Deletion of old and the inclusion of new material insure the wide reputation of this work as an up-to-date compendium on the subject. Although entitled a dictionary it is in parts cyclopedic, with many fairly long descriptive texts and numerous illustrations." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

"The most notable additions relate to the electric clocks, which have now become of such great practical importance. Further notes and diagrams are given on terminal curves, the latter, however, losing some of their value by being reduced in size in reproduction. Additional information on chronographs, keyless work, lathes, striking clocks and precision clocks are but a few of the items that have been included in this new edition. This book should be in every library and a copy possessed by every watch and clock maker." Horological journal

1 Clock and watch making 48-5126

"Beginning with the sundial, hourglass, and water clock, this book presents a popularized history of the measurement of time. It describes various types of historic clocks and watches and traces the style trend in modern watches from the cumbersome pocket piece of the last century to the wrist watch of today, showing that most of the improvements have been in design rather than in movements. The last four chapters provide semitechnical descriptions of watch manufacturing in the Gruen factories in Switzerland and in this country at the present time. The bibliography lists over 100 books and magazine articles of interest to the general reader and collector." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

Corrosion, causes and prevention; an engineering problem. 2d ed. McGraw 1935 694p illus $8 691

1 Corrosion and anti-corrosives 35-7874

"This revised edition brings the 1926 edition up to date, adding certain new information and discarding such of the old data as have been superseded. It is divided into two parts, the first giving a description of how corrosion proceeds and its causes, and the second discussing practical methods of prevention. . . The appendix contains calculations and chemical determinations applicable to corrosion, gives special recommendations for preventing corrosion in refrigerating plants, and a tabulation of accepted materials for handling various corrosives." Industrial and engineering chemistry

"Comprehensive, authoritative treatment with special reference to ferrous metals and chief attention to practical problems. Based on a very thorough examination of existing literature and on the experience of the author who is Director of the metallurgical department of the National tube company." Pittsburgh

"This book is designed to apply existing theory to actual practice in the industry. It is not intended to supplant texts on the physics and thermodynamics of air conditioning, but rather to complement them—to lead the student into the channels of thought which are the prime interest of those intimately connected with the industry. It has been the purpose of the authors to present the material in such manner that not only will it be useful to the scientifically minded but also that men of limited technical training may grasp the essential principles and practices of the art." Air conditioning: furnaces and unit heaters. . . Am. tech. soc. 1938 430p illus $3.50 697
1 Air conditioning 2 Furnaces 3 Heating (W) 38-3142
"Presents basic principles and tells in detail how to calculate and provide for heating, cooling, humidifying, dehumidifying, and air-cleaning. Typical house plans are included and numerous problems are given with solutions. An example is worked out in great detail for a twenty-year-old house in which a worn-out gravity system is to be replaced by an up-to-date air conditioned system of the forced type. There are numerous tables and illustrations, also a psychochrometric chart. The author assumes for the reader some acquaintance with algebra, and a knowledge of blueprint reading, sheet metal work, and architectural detailing." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

"A practical treatise on the principles and general application of steam, hot water, vapor, vacuum, and forced air for heating; split systems for heating and ventilating; air conditioning for all types of buildings." Subtitle
"This practical work of nearly 600 pages presents methods for the design and installation of various systems. Principles and calculations have been simplified and the mathematics are limited to arithmetic and elementary algebra. The text contains detailed descriptions of representative jobs and there are numerous practice problems for which charts and tabular data are provided. Contains 300 good illustrations." 1 Hot water heating 2 Radiant heating 47-2283
Professor Giesecke has "according to his own statement. . . incorporated all of his knowledge of hot-water heating, radiant heating and radiant cooling in this book. Although there is considerable discussion of basic principles, most of the text consists of step-by-step design procedures. The book is intended chiefly for the use of advanced engineering students and graduate engineers; but the treatment is not beyond the grasp of men who have become heating-system designers without the benefit of formal engineering education. Oddly enough, no index has been provided, and the table of contents is a mere list of chapter titles." N.Y. public lib. New technical books

New material has been included—particularly in the areas of store display, industrial design, and table appointments. . . With all of its changes, the book remains basically what it was when it was first written—a study of the application of the fundamental principles of design and color." Preface to the third edition

"Covering a wide field of problems, such as design of houses, interior decoration, dress and advertising, this book explains and applies the principles of art in relation to harmony, proportion, balance and color. The illustrations show clearly the 'right' and 'wrong' solution of these questions." N.Y. state lib.

"This book is written for the artist and the layman, for everyone interested in his relationship to our existing civilization. It is an extension of my previous book, 'The New Vision'. But while 'The New Vision' gave mainly particulars about the educational methods of the old Bauhaus, 'Vision in Motion' concentrates on the work of the Institute of Design, Chicago, and presents a broader, more general view of the interrelatedness of art and life. Recognizing the arts as an integral part of our existence, this book takes as its basic premise the unity of the arts with life." Foreword

Clarification of the relationship of modern design, painting, literature, architecture, the cinema, science and industry. He makes the most thorough inquiry thus far attempted into the space-time reality of modern man and his emotional existence. A strong advocate of the interrelatedness of all human activities, Moholy-Nagy makes a plea for the integration of contemporary art, technology and science

Book in the spheres of art criticism and sociology. Mr Reed sets out to revive the thesis, first advanced by Plato, that art should be the basis of any natural and ennobling form of education. He then attempts to establish Plato's thesis in the terms of modern psychology and pedagogics. In the course of his researches he makes a new analysis of artistic activity in children, illustrated by many reproductions of children's drawings. The problems of the curriculum, of methods of teaching and of school environment are discussed in further chapters, and in the end the purpose of education is seen to involve the integration of the individual in a free society

Aims "to supply to home owners a volume which shows in simple terms just how to develop the home grounds, according to the standards of good taste as they prevail today." Preface

Ramsey, Leonidas W. and Lawrence, Charles H.

Outdoor living room. Macmillan 1931 126p illus o.p. 1948 712

1 Landscape gardening 32-428

"Discusses the planning and planting of the backyard garden and garden living room, describing how to locate them; the planting of the hedges, shrubs, and other greenery; the planting of trees for shade and for decoration; the choice of flowers; and the making and care of lawns." Book rev. digest

"The authors are professional landscape architects of wide, practical experience.

They make clear each point, as it arises, building up a picture which is straightforward, sharply defined and finally drawn into a well rounded composition. Altogether an excellent book which, within its intentional limitations, can be unreservedly commended." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

1 Lawns 29-9736

"The book is more than one on how to make a lawn. By text and pictures the reader is informed how to lay it out and place the other elements of the landscape picture, how to correct mistakes, what grasses to use and how to maintain the lawn with least labor and best results." Boston Transcript

"The excellent index makes the book useful for constant reference." Books (N.Y. Herald Tribune)

1 Lawns 40-27821

First published 1940 by McGraw. An American garden guild book

"This book is intended for all those who are interested in good turf, whether it be on lawns, parks, estates, golf courses, or other recreation fields. . . In presenting information on soil conditions and treatment, behavior of grasses, and control of pests, an effort has been made to offer the latest scientific results, in terms of practical lawn culture. The discussions and recommendations are nontechnical, however, and illustrations are used to supplement the printed page." Preface

Architecture and modern life. Harper 1937 339p illus o.p. 1948 720

1 Architecture 2 City planning 3 Housing 37-28459

"The text is a somewhat philosophical discussion on architecture and living, with chapters on such subjects as Architecture and social life, Some aspects of the past and present of architecture, Expression and the modern world, A balanced society; and a closing dialogue between the two authors, based on Mr. Wright's Broadacre City. Decentralization is a basic theme thruout." Wis. bul.

"The book is richer than any outline of its content. Both authors are men of knowledge, imagination, force, and, on occasion, wit. . . One may question some of the broad attacks on cities and city life. . . The book remains a remarkable achievement, enlightening both as to architecture and as to social life. It is one of the best expressions I know of the organic one-ness of architecture and humanity." Sat. rev. of lit.

"A collection of papers read at a conference at Princeton University, in 1947, devoted to the study of man's physical environment. The papers were revised after the conference. The subjects started with an analytical inquiry of the environmental needs of man, the application of principles in planning and the use of space. It is a statement of the position of architecture today by some of the most noted architects." Library journal

1 Architecture (W) 47-2376

A complete rewriting of the author's elementary guide "Enjoyment of architecture" published 1921

The theme Mr Hamlin follows is that architecture is an art with which everyone comes into daily contact. Understanding buildings intelligently will provide the same pleasure as understanding painting, sculpture, music, or literature. An increased appreciation of architecture can provide means for a richer life

"By no means the usual outline history, but an interpretation of building as an expression of social ideas. . . The author points out that in Egypt building was done for the immortalizing of a few at the expense of the many. [In] the Gothic age, Mr. Whitaker sees an interlude of free and happy craftsmanship. . . Tracing the development of English and American building to modern times, the author hails as 'the one vital spark' the work of Louis H. Sullivan, who taught the organic adjustment of building to vital needs." Boston
"It is a book which should be possessed and read slowly and pondered upon . . . Mr. Whitaker's book is a challenge to leadership in a world that sadly needs a clarifying of standards and a redefining of the purposes of civilization." Survey graphic

A highly authoritative work first published in 1902 in one volume. In the present edition v 1 (Greece) is revised by W. B. Dinsmore and v2 (Rome) by Thomas Ashby. Many excellent illustrations. The bibliographies have been brought up to date

"It is a tribute to the excellence of Messrs. Anderson & Spiers' volume on the history of Greek and Roman architecture that, in spite of the researches which a generation of archæologists have made in the same field, the original treatise needed to be revised but not superseded." Nation and Athenaeum

Handbook of Greek & Roman architecture. Macmillan 1929 xxiv, 406p illus o.p. 1948 722

1 Architecture, Greek 2 Architecture, Roman [29-16617]

"A sound standard handbook of Greek and Roman architecture dealing with its successive phases from dim prehistoric times. . . . The book may be unreservedly recommended for its scholarly and lucid style and the fullness of its materials." Times (London) lit. sup.

"As a work of reference, its usefulness is much increased by chronological lists of important buildings from 1000 B.C. to 330 A.D., by an excellent classified bibliography, both topographical and technical, by a glossary of architectural terms, and by a general index." New statesman

Six lectures on the development of architecture given at the Lowell institute, Boston, in November and December, 1916, to which has been added a later essay on the essential spirit of the middle ages

"Mr Cram points the way to a new understanding of the middle ages. He deals with the development of architecture from Charlemagne to Henry VIII, rather in relation to its substance than its accidents. The purpose is to point out not only the material progress but also the spiritual forces which made that progress possible." Pittsburgh

"Ninety-two houses, complete with floor plans and elevations, including the twenty-four prize winners in full color and sixty-eight other excellent designs." Subtitle

"The plans were developed as solutions to housing needs in the Chicago area but are equally adaptable to any section of the country. The 92 house plans were developed to serve three types of families: (1) the family with father, mother, 6-year-old son; (2) the one with father, mother, 12-year-old son, and 6-year-old daughter; and (3) the family with father, mother, two daughters (16 and 6), and a 12-year-old son. Plans were developed within specified floor areas and lot sizes. They show modern trends in organization and use of space, use of materials, and integration of living area with gardened section of lot to give spaciousness and interest to living. Designs are about equally divided between one- and two-floor types. Floor plans, elevations and suggestions for use of the lot are included." Journal of home economics

‡ Life, by himself; tr. into English by John Addington Symonds. Liveright 513p $2.49 735
1 Sculptors—Correspondence, reminiscences, etc.
Symonds' translation is a classic but expurgated. It was first published in two volumes in 1887
Cellini was "the first goldsmith of his time, an adequate sculptor, a restless traveler, an indefatigable workman, a Bohemian of the purest water, a turbulent bravo, a courtier and companion of princes; finally, a Florentine who used his native idiom with incomparable vivacity of style . . . Those who have made themselves thoroly familiar with Cellini's 'Memoirs' possess the substance of that manysided epoch [the 16th century] in the form of an epitome. It is the first book which a student of the Italian renaissance should handle in order to obtain the right direction for his more minute researches. . . . From the pages of this book the Genius of the renaissance, incarnate in a single personality, leans forth and speaks to us." J. A. Symonds
